On November 7, Jeffree revealed to his fans in an elaborate, 23-minute video all the new products in his Blood Money palette launch. The teaser of the collection included bright green images, a sweeping shot of his fancy estate - oh, and an alligator. The article goes on under the adFor those who watched the entire collection reveal video, many felt that Jeffree was not as committed to this collection as he was to some of his former. The influencer is known, at least, for the passion the curation and naming of his new cosmetics collections. But in his launch video, many called him out for not looking so excited about blood collection, starting some drama around it. Article continues under adAfter Jeffree posted his launch video, the comments section was filled with viewers claiming that Jeffree doesn't seem excited about starting at all. Many compared him to an infomercial QVC, arguing that the video was not representative of the typical, personal, close-up appearance of the products he started. He turned into Jaclyn Hill, posting vids just to promote his products, one comment read, while another said, This looks and feels like an ad 'As seen on TV'... Other common reviews included comments that the editing job left pauses in Jeffree's comment, making it look as if he didn't know the names of his own shades, and that the camera was set far behind for viewers to actually see the products he was trying to show. In a video on his channel, Jeffree apologized to his fans for the less-than-satisfying launch video. In addition to revealing that the launch video was edited by a new editor, he also said he wasn't in the best headspace the day it was shot. Article goes on under adpakeSource:YouTube I had a scary day when I filmed that reveal, he said, continuing to recognize that part of the material in the trailer (like the alligator) was unnecessary and not in the best taste. I wanted to create a larger-than-life moment to match the feel of the collection, which was why I shot that [video]. To make amends for viewers, Jeffree re-revealed the collection in his typical style, showing up close samples of the products so viewers know what they're paying for. The article continues under the advertisement In addition to the drama surrounding the launch of his new product, Jeffree has also been involved in a lawsuit by the estate of Anna Nicole Smith. According to Entertainment Tonight Canada, the YouTuber is being sued by the model's estate for using its likeness to sell products. The estate claims Anna Jeffree nicole lip shadow is a reference to the signature red color model, and that the estate did not approve of the use of her name. According to the outlet, the estate is seeking damages for the commercial use of those rights, let alone compensation commensurate with the substantial commercial value associated with Smith's celebrity. Jeffree has removed lip shadow from Jeffree's star cosmetics website, although it can still be purchased through third-party retailers. Retailers.
